So, here I stand again,

Ignoring the clarion call of head With no strength to withstand, Any form of distress.

Been told a hundred times,

To not cross the desired line

But every single time,

The lady in me refuses to comply.

I've been fighting against the waves, Since decades.

Always tried to run away

From everything that decays.

My voice has been subdued,

I feel like I've been used.

Not once, not twice, not thrice, But almost my whole life.

And here I stand again,

With so many complaints.

But there's nobody who could address The ever-growing pain in my chest.
